NEW-YORK DAILY TRIBUNE, SATURDAY, JULY 29, 1854.

Let this prolonged silence, then pass to the credit of the Administration; and though it cannot prevent its punishment as a political body, it may at least alleviate the sentence which history will have to pronounce upon its individual members.

We cannot recall any other public question with regard to which there has been such unity of opinion. Journals habitually opposed on every other subject representing every shade of party feeling, every divergence of interest, and every antagonism of nationality, have all concurred in the destruction of San Juan, a needless, unjustifiable, inhuman exercise of warlike force. Conservatives and radicals, Whigs and Democrats, Americans and Foreigners all agree in this one thing—all express the same horror and disgust. Indeed, amongst all the papers which have yet spoken, we know of but one, and that an obscure and scurrilous sheet in this City, which has attempted to find an excuse for the measure. That excuse is, that the people of San Juan were a set of dishonest and vagabond characters who were served right by the law as any other; and also that San Juan was not burned on account of the reputation of its inhabitants, but because they were said to have insulted Solon Borland of Arkansas. That insult was the reason for the bombs and torpedoes which Messrs. Pierce and Marcy so triumphantly employed against eighty frame buildings and their non-resistant furniture and merchandise. We say that was the sole reason, for though they also ordered the town to pay the Transit Company $24,000 for having removed a shed worth some $250, this was a mere make-weight in business revived for the occasion after having slept a year or so. Had there been nothing more than the refusal to pay that money, the town would still have been standing and the shells and powder of the Cyane would still be resting peacefully in her magazine. The dubious insult to an Ambassador engaged in defending a homicide against the law, was exclusively the cause of the sack of Greytown, as the rape of Helen for the burning of Troy; and unless that insult can be made to appear as a sufficient reason for such a punishment, it will be in vain to defend the latter by any imputations, true or false, upon the character of the Greytown people.

The ground upon which Borland claimed to interfere in behalf of the alleged murderer to the extent of threatening to kill with his own hand the officer who sought to arrest him, was that the United States had never recognized the authorities of San Juan and consequently he would not allow them to enforce their jurisdiction upon an American citizen or a person whom he chose to consider as such. This ground was substantially reaffirmed by Mr. Marcy and Mr. Pierce when they sent the Cyane to take vengeance for Borland's insulted dignity; for unless the authorities of the place were grossly transcending their powers and were violating the rights of the United States by punishing a murderer within their limits, Borland's interference was clearly nothing but presumption for which he should at once have been reprimanded and dismissed by the President, and the demonstration against him, nothing but justifiable burst of feeling for which neither the people nor the authorities, of San Juan should for an instant have been held to an account. The only defense which even Borland can attempt to make turns, therefore, upon the question whether our Government had or had not recognized those authorities. To say that it had not, and that it regarded the authorities as mere interlopers and usurpers, cannot indeed justify the terrible chastisement it has inflicted; but if it had recognized them, it is deprived of the last shadow of an excuse, and will find it difficult to furnish any for the use of those who may hereafter undertake to defend it. On this head the record stands against Messrs. Pierce and Marcy to a degree which they must have forgotten when they gave Commander Rollins his barbarous orders. Hardly a year ago Lord Clarendon, in a dispatch to the British Ambassador at Washington, dated July 29, 1853, states that both the British and American Governments had ordered their naval commanders in Central America to support the de facto Government of San Juan; and Mr. Marcy himself, in a dispatch to Mr. Ingersoll, dated June 9, 1853, says in so many words that the purpose of such joint orders was to preserve the public peace at San Juan and to punish wrong-doers. This being the case, the pretense on which Borland acted is swept away; he appears with no other authority for the protection of murderers than would belong to any other bully from Arkansas, and the indignation feeling of the people of San Juan is shown to have had a perfectly legitimate occasion.

It is lucky for the many Americans whose property has thus been destroyed, that they are not alone in this calamity; but that subjects of other powerful nations have also been despoiled. Had nobody suffered but citizens of this country, it is probable that the victims would never have had their losses made good. At least, the fortune of other creditors of the Government, such as the claimants from the French expedition, would only authorize the new sufferers to despair. But now that the reclamations of English and French subjects must be listened to, and their destroyed property paid for, our own citizens may likewise expect to be compensated. The deed is done, and it only remains for the nation, as far as possible, to repair the wrongs inflicted by its agents. We can only hope that Congress will do its duty in the premises, as promptly as may be. If we cannot wipe out the shame of the country, we can at least restore the wealth that has been destroyed, and to a great extent relieve the misery that has been caused; and in doing this there should not be needless hours delay.

THE BRUTAL FIGHT.

We give in another column a letter from Capt. Ackerman of the Ninth Ward Police, in regard to the late fight at the foot of Amos-st. The writer says he was sick, should in some degree excuse him from responsibility. At 2 o'clock in the morning he was apprised of the probability of a fight at the place where it really came off. This information was gathered at a notorious rum-hole kept by the man Mason, who is contesting the right of the Excise Commissioners to refuse him a license, and is now selling liquor in defiance of law as scores of other men are doing in that Ward without a word of opposition from the police. Capt. Ackerman sent his informant to the fight, who was in command at the Station-House, directing that the men who were to come off duty at sunrise and another squad beside should be kept in readiness to put down the fight, and that a man should be deputed to watch the place. This man was sent, as was likely to occur, reported to Sebring, who, instead of sending the policemen at once to the foot of Amos-st. sent the messenger to Capt. Ackerman—the Captain's house, we may as well mention, is in Greenwich st. near the corner of Amos, not more than two hundred yards from and almost in sight of the place where the fight came off. Capt. A. then went to his station-house and found the Lieutenant and men quietly reposing in their beds, although they evidently knew that the fight was going on.
